

Compliance with University IT Policies

The Office of Information Technologies (UNIT) maintains a variety of policies governing the use of University computing and communication resources. Every member of the University community is bound by these policies and is required to review them at least annually. Persons found in violation of these policies will be subject to the full range of disciplinary sanctions, up to and including expulsion. In order to retain necessary flexibility in administration of policies, the University reserves the right to interpret, revise, or delete any of the provisions of these policies, as the University deems appropriate in its discretion. All changes in policy are approved by appropriate governing bodies of the University prior to publication.

Complete copies of all University computing policies are available in the Villanova Policy Library to include, but not limited to: copyright infringement and illegal file sharing; email policy; use of computing and information resources; and web policy.

1. The Office of University Information Technologies (UNIT) maintains a variety of policies governing the use of University computing and communication resources. Every member of the University community is bound by them and is expected to be thoroughly familiar with them. Students in violation of these policies will be subject to the full range of disciplinary sanctions, up to and including expulsion. See “Computing Policies” in the Student Handbook.
2. Misuse of IT systems may include but is not limited to:
 1. Unauthorized entry into a voice/email mailbox; or
 2. Unauthorized use of another individual’s username or password; or
 3. Use of University telephone/email/internet to send abusive, harassing or obscene messages may result in disciplinary probation plus other disciplinary measures, up to and including suspension.